tainment news items aren't released this way, but we're not far from it. Over the course of 20 hours Monday and Tuesday, the official poster for "The Twilight Saga: Breaking Dawn-Part 2" was released in six separate pieces at six different Facebook URLs. The news release indicates this occurred at times geared toward consumption in New Zealand, Tokyo, Dubai, London and Buenos Aires (with the full poster revealed particularly for North America), ignoring the fact that people can use the Internet whenever they want regardless of their time zone.

You'll never guess what the first piece of the poster was: A picture of Edward (Robert Pattinson) gazing intensely at Bella (Kristen Stewart), while she stared unhappily at the ground! This is a shocking revelation. It could mean that the final "Twilight" movie will have characters who are gloomy and lovers who sometimes look at each other, but other times look away. Spoiler alert!

A high percentage of the globe has drooled over Stephenie Meyer's books and their big-screen adaptations, making stars of its cast-well, not really Taylor Lautner; the guy's a model posing as an actor, and he'll be

I have a huge, mindblowing story for you about a major celebrity. Get this:

Katy Perry was caught in ____ while and his limo driver ____ an entire case of __

I will fill in each empty space on the first Wednesday of the next four months. Excited?

Fortunately, enter-out of our hair soon-and front-page tabloid news out of Pattinson and Stewart's deniedthen-dreamy-then-rocky-then-who-knows

At this point, though, after three bad-todreadful movies and an exciting one (that'd be "Eclipse"), it's hard to believe the conclusion to the world's dreariest love triangle will avoid unintentional laughs. And it's particularly challenging to avoid chuckling at the notion of individual pieces of a poster unveiled one at a time. Although, in the third piece, Bella, embracing Edward, kind of looks like Edward's sister Alice (if she had long hair like the actress who plays her, Ashley Greene), > which would be a twist I did not see coming.

The media frequently indulge in teases. I do it whenever I have bits of an interview to post in advance of a full story that won't run for weeks. TV news does it every day, noting that a household item could kill you but insisting you tune in at 10 p.m. to find out which one. (Answer: Your steak knife.)

Still, we've officially come to the point where breaking down news into the tiniest possible pieces has become a strained effort to create hype for absolutely everything. The release of the final poster.

in which Edward, Bella, Jacob and supporting characters whose names I've forgotten run in the snow, generates the same reaction inspired by the movies overall: a shrug.

I'm in favor of finding new ways to capture an audience, but soon casting news will not be delivered in the form of an official statement or a photo of a person in costume but a DNA sample taken from one strand of hair, forcing us to cross-reference lab work/blood types/ genetic history of Hollywood's biggest names.

If you think there aren't passionate fans out there who'd put in that time and effort, thousands of Twi-hards around the world are ready to prove you wrong.

CITY AT WATER OF THE PROPERTY OF THE PROPERTY

Chicago gang factions fighting among themselves as homicide rate soars

Chicago Tribune

As Chicago struggles with its highest murder rate in years, the role of a single street gang stands out: more than a quarter of the city's nearly 400 homicide victims through Sept. 25 were affiliated with the Gangster Disciples, according to Chicago Police statistics obtained by the Tribune.

Long the city's largest gang, the Gangster Disciples have dominated significant swaths of the South Side for decades. But now authorities say the gang is eating itself from within, riven by feuding factions with names like "Killa Ward" and "Hit Squad" that engage in bloody conflicts over turf they once shared.

Chicago's spike in murders so far this year has drawn national attention and proven a knotty problem for Mayor Emanuel. Gang violence has played a major role in the mounting toll, and police say their job is complicated by a new generation of gangbangers more willing to strike out on their own without respect for traditional hierarchies.

Police records, using preliminary assessments from investigators, show 100 of the 392 homicide victims through late September were connected to the Gangster Disciples. No other gang was close, with the next highest being the 22 murder victims linked to the Black P Stones, the CPD statistics show. Even given the Gangster Disciples greater size, the disparity is notable.

Police Supt. Garry McCarthy has cited the growth of factions within Chicago's traditional gangs as one reason for the higher murder

"Back in March, we hit the high point as far as shootings are concerned and that was a direct result of the splintering of the gangs into smaller factions, which, in essence, doubled the number of gangs in the city," McCarthy said in May.

Gang slayings

More than a quarter of Chicago homicide victims so far in 2012 were members of the city's largest street gang. Thirty-one gang affiliations were listed among victims.

SOURCES, CHICAGO BOI ICE TRIBLINE

As part of a gang audit conducted earlier this year, the department said there were more than 600 gang factions in the city. According to the Chicago Crime Commission, the department has identified 250 factions of the Gangster Disciples in the city.

"They're splintering off into smaller gang factions, and that's getting more difficult for us to track and predict what's going to happen next," McCarthy said earlier this year.

Police typically use several methods to determine an individual's gang affiliation, including past arrests and admissions to gang membership, tattoos and intelligence gathered on the streets and in jails. Investigators also scour social media sites such as Twitter and Facebook.

Former gang members don't always agree with police conclusions. One former Gangster Disciple member said the factions within the gang have created their own identities and shouldn't be linked to a single gang.

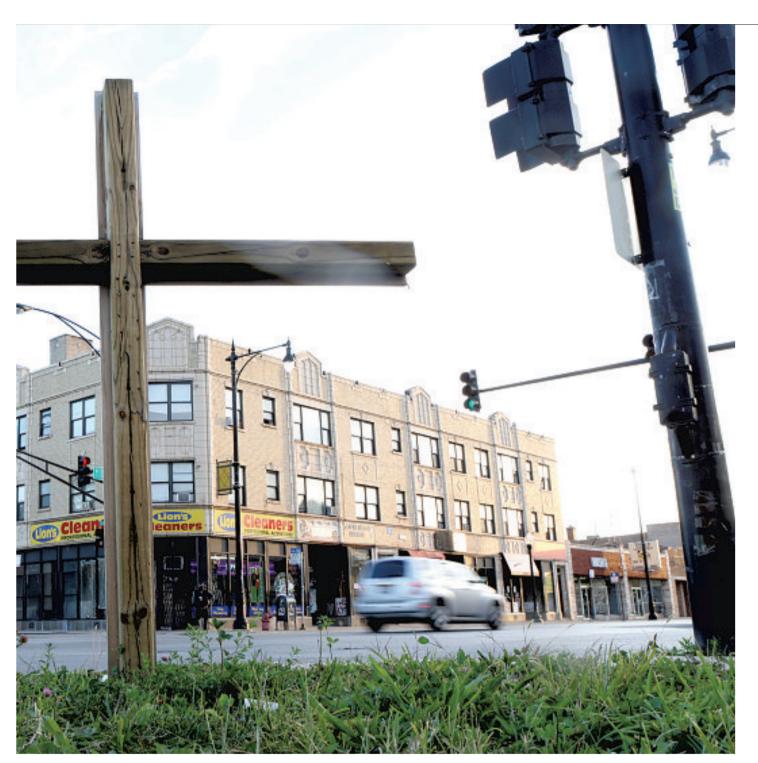

"I think that it's actually unfair to call these young group subcultures of the Gangster Disciples, because they really are not," said the man, who said he was active in the gang in the early-1990s and asked that his name not be used. "They're the product of the residue of what the Gangster Disciples used to be in the communities."

There are an estimated 10,000 to 30,000 Gangster Disciples in Chicago, according to the Chicago Crime Commission—by comparison, the Black P Stones membership is about 20,000, the Latin Kings about 10,000 and the Black Disciples, 4,000.

The origins of the Gangster Disciples go back to the 1960s, and it became a major criminal force under the leadership of Larry Hoover in the 1970s. Hoover, who authorities say ran the gang even while in prison on murder charges, built an operation that was as sophisticated as a legitimate corporation. The leadership established a strict code of conduct for its members, reprimanding them for unacceptable behavior including violence.

Hoover transformed the Gangster Disciples into a multi-state drug distribution network by the mid-1990s, the U.S. Drug Enforcement Administration told the Tribune in 2004. He shifted the gang away from traditional street market competition to impose a franchise system on drug sales.

"They had armies of lawyers and accountants. They had their own clothing line, music promotion company, political action committee. They had a structure that helped them insulate the leaders from the drugs and the guns," said Ron Safer, a former assistant U.S. attorney who prosecuted Hoover in the 1990s.

After Hoover and other gang leaders were taken down by in a federal drug-trafficking, extortion and criminal enterprise case in 1997—Hoover now is in a federal supermax prison in Florence, Colo.—a steady splintering of the Gangster Disciples began that has increased in the past decade, experts said.

Younger gang members have not adhered to the organized leadership structure set up by their predecessors. This has led to a fresh spasm of violence as the lines marking gang turf are blurred and former members of the same umbrella gang became rivals

"You're more likely, just by general sociological laws, to come into conflict with people who are next to you," said Andrew Papachristos, a sociologist at Yale University who is working on a book about the gang.

"So if you're around four other [gang] sects and you're no longer partying with them on a daily basis," he said, "those conflicts will be more likely to erupt because you don't have that Grand Poobah telling you what to do anymore."

They had armies of lawyers and accountants. They had their own clothing line, music promotion company, political action committee."

RISE IN VIOLENCE

Chicago Tribune

Violent crime actually was much worse in Chicago in the early 1990s, when around 900 people were killed in the city each year, compared to murder tallies in the 400s in recent years. But after years of decline this year has seen a rise in violence. Through Sept. 25, there was a 27 percent increase in homicides over the same period a year ago, while shootings were up 10 percent.

Much of the increase can be attributed to the first 3 I/2 months of the year, when homicides were up 66 percent from the same period a year earlier and shootings up 36 percent.

So far this year, the police districts with the highest increases in violent crime encompass South and Southwest Side neighborhoods that are notorious Gangster Disciple strongholds.

The gang holds a tight grip on parts of the Chicago Lawn police district, where through July homicides were up 156 percent over the same period a year before. The increase was mainly attributed by police to conflicts between two Gangster Disciple factions, Rec City and the Hit Squad.

Neighborhoods like Chicago Lawn and Marquette Park might be populated by a few dozen factions, police said. Each probably has of 15 to 20 followers, said Rafi Peterson, a community activist who works with gangs in the district.

"They're not just geographically tied down. They might be in a car. They might go to a party over here. But then they're representing this little clique over there," Peterson said. "And what happens? They're gunning each other wherever they catch each other."

The Gangster Disciples also occupy a large chunk of Auburn Gresham. That neighborhood falls within the Gresham police district, which leads the city with 33 homicides through Sept. 21.

Chicago Tribune

It has cool rims, a powerful V6 engine, a gun vault in the trunk and bullet-proof front doors.

"I call it a little tank on wheels," Lisa Teed, a marketing manager at Ford Motor, said during a vehicle demonstration Tuesday at a U.S. Cellular Field parking lot.

Otherwise known as the Police Interceptor, the vehicle is produced at the Ford Assembly Plant on the Far South Side. Since production began in January, police departments across the country have placed orders for 15,500 Interceptors, which comes in both sedan and sports utility versions, Teed said. Canadian law enforcement agencies have placed about 800 orders.

Thanks to the orders, Ford added 1,200 jobs, roughly doubling employment, in May at the assembly plant. The Interceptors are replacing the Crown Victoria, which have been used by law enforcement for about two decades. Production of that model ended last year.

As police departments are operating on tight budgets and using cars longer, Teed said it may take as long as four years before the Interceptors Chicago has ordered 185 Interceptors, including 132 SUVs and 53 sedans. They are expected to hit the streets in November and early next year. In total, the city plans to purchase 500 Police Interceptors at a cost of at least $15 million over five years.

The basic sedan is priced in the low $20,000 range and the utility between $25,000 and $30,000.

D-WADE ON D-ROSE, MIAMI'S QUEST TO REPEAT AND FASHION FRENZIES

By Matt Lindner | FOR REDEVE

It would be easy for Dwyane Wade to forecast a second straight NBA title in 2013 for his Mi-

After all, the ballyhooed Big Three of him, LeBron James and Chris Bosh are coming off a season that saw them advance to their second Finals in as many seasons together before knocking off Oklahoma City, However, when RedEve offered him that bait. Wade refused to take it.

"I'm not a predictor because you never know what's gonna go from one day to the next," he said, shaking his head. "We just wanna come out and hopefully stay as healthy as possible."

One thing Wade will admit: He's just as sick of being asked to compare James to Michael Jordan as you are of hearing those compari-

"Yeah, I mean it shouldn't [happen]," Wade said. "I understand it's going to happen. There are a lot of players that get compared to Michael Jordan. A lot of players go through that when you are a good player. They want to always put you against the greatest."

Like Bulls star Derrick Rose, the 30-yearold Wade finds himself working his way back from knee surgery. Unlike Rose, he's expected to be ready for the start of the season. NBA teams opened training camp this week.

The pair of Chicago stars did not speak over the summer, but Wade is confident Rose's injury shouldn't keep Bulls fans up at night.

"[Rehabilitation] is hard work. Obviously it can be done and you can come back and be not only the same player but even better," Wade said. "[Rose] has to trust the doctors, trust the people around him to help him get back and trust his instincts when he gets back on the court. It's not gonna be easy right away, but he's a tough kid, he's from the city of Chicago and I think he's gonna be just fine."

Wade's love for his hometown pulls him back every offseason, though not as frequently as he'd like despite the fact that he maintains a home here.

"It's been about a total of a week in Chicago for this whole offseason. It's tough with my schedule," he said prior to a recent event for his Wade's World Foundation at UIC. "Before I got custody of my kids, I was here a lot because my boys were here, but now they're in Miami."

He is committed to making a difference in Chicago despite the fact that he's unable to make it home often. His foundation works with at-risk youth in the city to curb violence by promoting literacy, education and other life skills

"I deal with a lot of kids because you see what's out there for them and you want to kind of change the direction for them," he said. "It's unfortunate that we have to deal with these crises in Chicago, but there are ways where we're trying to do our job and redirection these kids so they don't go down the same path.'

WHAT'S IN WADE'S CLOSET?

In addition to being a role model, Dwyane Wade has established himself as an NBA fashion icon. His hipster glasses and funky outlits at press conferences were the talk of the league last year.

"We all go through phases of styles, and the nerd glasses have been done over and over and other level. It's just social media at its best."

When asked what the next fashion trend in the NBA would be, Wade is coy. "Thaven't gotten that far yet," he said. "I always try to come up with something every year, so we'll see what comes out of the closet." ML

What's the first thing the Cubs/White Sox will do when the season ends? Cubs: Sell tickets based on hope. Sox: Get some damn bullpen help. Dodge rotten tomatoes on their way out of the players' parking lots.

The White Sox will drive each other home, something they didn't do in September.

What should be the Cubs' punishment for reaching 100 losses?

They should have to watch themselves play. The fans should have the option of swapping them for the Astros.

SCHOOL OF CONTINUING STUDIES

studs&duds

Jack M

So THAT'S what it looks like when Jay Cutler smiles. In fact, Monday's Bears win illustrated not just what his smiles look like but where they come from.

For instance, when the offensive line gives Cutler time to throw, he smiles. And when best buddy Brandon Marshall gives him a jump ball target as large as Shaq in the post, he smiles. And when he flips a pass off his back foot to a sprinting Devin Hester for a touchdown, yes, the cantankerous quarterback is all smiles.

Speaking of that beautiful touchdown, Hester smiles when he watches the replay and sees that he did indeed have both hands beneath the football. Kyle Adams smiles when he springs Matt Forte for an 8-yard run. Forte smiles when he guts out yards on an injured ankle. Kellen Davis smiles when a batted ball lands on his chest.

And Alshon Jeffery smiles when his fumble is reversed and he is ruled down by contact. (That even makes Lovie Smith smile.)

Then there's Henry Melton, who smiles after he's dragged Tony Romo down for a sack or pressured Romo into an interception that bounds into the arms of Lance Briggs. Briggs smiles when he cuts that turnover upfield and into the end zone. Charles Tillman smiles when he double-checks his grip on an interception before scoring his seventh career defensive TD, tying him with former teammate Mike Brown.

Major Wright smiles big when he nabs his second interception of the game. Chris Conte and D.J. Moore smile when they use their limited frames to torque opponents to the ground. And Bears fans smile when their team invades Cowboys Stadium and mollywhomps Dallas on national TV.

Next up for the first place Bears is Jacksonville (1-3) on Sunday, followed by a week off. I don't care who you are, that'll leave you smiling.

Thanks to all who entered Volume 3 of RedEye's Bears Trivia Challenge! Here's the question again. followed by the answer:

Question: How many Toyota Priuses would you have to stack on a scale to tip the weight, if the entire Bears active roster were on the other side?

Answer: According to Toyota, the curb weight of a Prius is 3,042 pounds. Adding up the weight of the Bears' 53-man active roster, you get 13,120 pounds. Divide that by 3.042 and you get 4.31. In other words, you need 5 whole Priuses to tip the scale. Congratulations to Kyle Backman (@KyleBackman10) our winner this week. He'll appear Friday in Four Score.

SOUND BOARD

KEEPING YOU PLUGGED IN TO TODAY'S MOST BUZZWORTHY MUSIC

Until the Quiet Comes Flying Lotus

By Ernest Wilkins

REDEVE SOUND BOARD
If this is your first time experiencing the work of Flying Lotus (real name:
Steven Ellison), you might be in over your head.

His new fulllength "Until the Quiet Comes" subscribes to a different definition of mash-up. No, you aren't going to hear Lil' Boosie over a Fall Out Boy song (if anyone actually is working on that, please send it my way soon) but you will experience a fusion of live instruments, bowel-rattling bass and overt jazz influences.

This album is markedly different from 2010's "Cosmogramma," which was like a soundtrack to an alien invasion." "Quiet" is like what would happen if a Millennial made Miles Davis' jazz classic "Kind of Blue." I'm calling it right now: Standout track "Sultan's Revenge" is going to be remixed halfway to oblivion by Christmas.

After each of three full listens, I was taken aback at how much I missed the previous time.

Not like there are secret lyrics or something: think more like full instruments that you just didn't catch because you were focused on a cool guitar part or transition.

Guest spots from Erykah Badu (in rare form on "See Thru To U") and Thom Yorke harmonizing with monkey noises on "Electric Candyman" were surprises that felt absolutely right upon return listens.

It's a jazz album (Trivia: FlyLo's great uncle was John Coltrane) disguised as an electronica album that might be the best music to put on when you have a pile of work in front of you that will come out this year.

Get out of your comfort zone and give this a listen ASAP.

The "Resident Evil" series has experienced something of an identity crisis over the years, never totally settling on slow-burning horror or zombie-blasting action as its modus operandi. So for the sixth chapter, Capcom offers a smorgasbord of both suspense and shooting. The nonsensical story of zombie presidents, evil corporations and biological weapons is broken up into four separate chapters, each with different play styles. It doesn't always work perfectly, but toss in a compelling two-player cooperative mode and jump-out-of-your-seat moments of real scares, and you get the best "Resident Evil" game in years.

Tokyo Jungle PlayStation 3

They say it's a dogeat-dog world, but in "Tokyo Jungle," it's a dog-eat-cat-eat-hyena-eat-porcupine world. Humans are extinct in this quirky Japanese import and domestic pets and farm animals have gone feral in a desperate quest for survival on the city streets. You start with a plant munching deer or a comically fearsome toy Pomeranian and spend your days hunting for food, a mate, and a place to lay your furry head so you can start doing it like they do it on the Discovery Channel. It's unfortunate that "Tokyo Jungle" contains so many glitches and poor design flaws because National-Geographic-meets-post-apocalyptia is a beast of an idea.

Soccer itself hasn't changed radically over the years, but

EA Sports' "FIFA" soccer franchise continues to evolve. The new features include smarter computercontrolled behavior, more precise dribbling, realistic player collisions and tweaks to the Ultimate Team mode. A few nagging flaws in the gameplay remain, but nothing that deserves more than a yellow card. If you don't know Lionel Messi from Lionel Richie, it's doubtful that it will turn you on to soccer, but fans should head to the virtual pitch of "FIFA '13"

The Radler

Fine dining chefs bring Bavaria just a bit closer

By Lisa Arnett | REDEYE

With Oktoberfest in Munich in full swing, Chicago got some beer-tastic news of its own last week: A group of chefs announced plans to open a Bavarian-style beer hall in the spring or early summer in Logan Square or Lincoln Park.

The team includes Nathan Sears, chef de cuisine at Paul Virant's award-winning restaurant in suburban Western Springs, and Adam Hebert, who has also worked at Vie. Virant is a consultant and partner. We talked to Sears about The Radler's German inspiration, the story behind the name and the fine-dining restaurant that'll be hidden inside. LMARNETT@TRIBUNE.COM | @REDEYEEATS

The tables will be communal

"If you think about the big, huge beer halls of Germany. that's what we want to mimic," Sears said. Picture a large space with long communal tables - for authenticity's sake, not trendiness. "We're not doing communal tables just to do 'em, [or to] get more people in. The concept upholds the idea." Besides plenty of beer, expect bar snacks, shareable plates and a half-dozen or so house-made sausages.

They hope the name doesn't intimidate

"We wanted the name to be German but not scare people off," Sears said. "We didn't want it to be like Bierstube or Hoffbrau House or Schnitzelwurst or something like that." The word "radler" means "bicyclist" in German. It's also a popular beer-hall drink made from beer mixed with soda or lemonade.

It's taking a page from New York's PDT

Inside The Radler, Sears and company also will run D.A.S., a tiny dining room with eight or so seats serving a German-inspired tasting menu. "We want to treat them as two completely different restaurants, kind of like Frontera and Topolobampo," Sears said. "It's ... the weird, trendy thing to do in New York. Like with PDT, you walk into a [hot dog joint] and you go downstairs and it's PDT, one of the best bars in New York supposedly," Sears said. D.A.S. is pronounced "das" and stands for "ding an sitch," a philosophical term meaning "thing within itself." Sears said they're planning six to seven courses for about $100 a person. "We're going to try to give people an incredible bargain and go back to the old world three-Michelin-star dining like it used to be," he said. "Not chemicals and foams ... just the best product we can find, execute it the best we can and present it very traditionally."

There won't be tickets

D.A.S. won't follow suit with limited-seating restaurants that use an online ticketing system to book diners, including Next, Alinea, Bonsoiree and just-opened Elizabeth. "I'm not a fan of that," Sears said. "Going online, trying to figure out, it reminds me of buying concert tickets when I was 16. It's like, 'I just want to talk to someone!" "he said. Though the exact logistics haven't been nailed down, reservations will be available by phone. The Radler will be first come, first served.

By Julia Borcherts | FOR REDEYE

Monique Madrid may try to cut you, but, hey—it's for your own good. The comedian and licensed cosmetologist takes the stage as her alter ego, an over-the-top, always fabulous stylist named Monica Barcelona, in "Bitch I'll Cut You," her improv comedy show set in a beauty salon during which one lucky audience member gets a makeover and another gets an onstage haircut.

BITCH I'LL CUT YOU

Go: 9:30 p.m. Thursday at The Annovance Theatre. 4830 N. Broadway Tickets: $10; 773-561-4665: annovanceproductions.com

Madrid—who performs improv and sketch comedy on stages across Chicago, toured with The Second City on Norwegian Cruise Line ships and recently competed in the local "Impress These Apes" comedy challenge contest—debuted "Bitch, I'll Cut You" at the Chicago Women's Funny Festival in June and brings the, ahem, cutting-edge comedy back to the stage in all its gossip-dishing glory for one night at The Annoyance. We called her to find out more.

Which came first-comedy school or beauty school?

Cosmetology school, actually, when I was 19. I grew up in Independence, Mo.—it's a little suburb of Kansas City-and I went to school specifically so I could move to a big city someday and pursue comedy and acting without waiting tables. [Laughs.] I was pretty dumb at 19, but that's the one smart decision I made. The economy may be bad but you always need a haircut; women will always buy lipstick.

How did Monique Madrid become Monica

She started out as a bowling character. My husband and I always have a "bowling" name when we go out. I always play Monica Barcelona, and he's Dale Portugal.

What happens when the audience walks into Monica Barcelona's salon?

There's an assistant that welcomes everybody. And then I bring a couple different people up on stage. We start to chat and get to talking. One person gets their makeup done. The second person gets an actual

And the nice thing is we explore the fact that when you go to a salon, you really open up to your stylist and it's kind of this intimate deal. So it's just talking and getting to know people in that same way that I would if I were actually working in my salon, only it's a little more heightened, of course, 'cause it's this fun character.

But I hope to make sure that the person up on stage with me is feeling comfortable. I'll take good care of them.

So people shouldn't be afraid to volunteer?

No, not at all. She may be this fun, crazy character but you will come out with a good

I always let people know, as Monica, "Hey, if you don't love what Monica does, her cousin-hint, hint-Monique Madrid will take care of you"-just so that they know the comedy isn't in the haircut itself.

Which celebrity would be Monica's dream client?

Monica might actually appreciate the crazy, wild side of Snooki—she is into making people feel fabulous. Her little catch phrase is "Oh, you is beautiful!"

Rather than being, like, "Oh, I gotta fix you," it's about bringing out whatever is already beautiful about you. That comes from my own philosophy of, I like to make people still feel like themselves—unless they're asking for some sort of dramatic makeover. Everybody's beautiful as is. It's just finding little ways to enhance you and make you feel even more beautiful.

So how might that play out onstage during

I'm really into making eyes pop. It's one of the most requested things I get. I think everybody wants their eyes to really sparkle and shine but also, that is my little focus area.

So I'll find a way to make them look even bigger and bolder—nothing crazy unless they want that or seem to be game for anything. But especially 'cause it's a 9:30 show, we'll get you done up all fabulous and then, hey, get yourself a date that night or something!

'Empire' state of mind

At the rate "Boardwalk Empire" is going, it may not have any living characters by the end of this season. But HBO is renewing it anyway. The Prohibition-era drama will be back for a fourth season, the network announced Tuesday.

HOT DATE

Blockbusters arrive earlier every year, and now the MTV Movie Awards will too. MTV said Tuesday that its annual awards will take place April 14, two months earlier than usual. The awards traditionally have aired the Sunday after Memorial Day.

'Fire' drill

The stars of NBC's "Chicago Fire" agree that Chicago, its people and its firefighters have welcomed the production to the city. After some initial confusion between the drama, which premieres Oct. 10, and a certain pro sports team, that is. "If you said, 'We're working on "Chicago Fire," 'they ask you if you're a soccer player," co-star Taylor Kinney said Monday during a conference call. The entire cast showed up in fire trucks Tuesday for a red carpet premiere at the Chicago History Museum.

FOO'S CLUES

See you around, Foo Fighters. After hinting over the weekend that the band would go on hiatus, frontman Dave Grohl confirmed it Tuesday. "I never want to NOT be in this band," he wrote. "So, sometimes it's good to just ... put it back in the garage for a while." Excuse us while we chill to some "Everlong" and let this sink in.

The actions I portrayed recently were not a representation of my true character, but a lapse in judgment on my part.'

-Brittany Kerr, former "American Idol" contestant, apologizing for photos ofs her and married country star Jason Aldean getting cozy at a bar, tmz.com reports. Aldean previously apologized on his Facebook page.

Less of Lisa

Look for a slimmed-down Lisa Lampanelli on Wednesday on Dr. Oz's daytime talk show. The foul-mouthed comedian will discuss how she dropped 80 pounds after surgery to reduce the size of her stomach, people.com reports. "I got sick of trying everything," Lampanelli says.
